

Healthcare Patient Communications Made Easy

Many healthcare organizations rely on outdated manual and labor-intensive processes to send critical patient communications such as statements, consent forms, release of information requests and insurance documents.

Every day external factors, like rising patient expectations, government mandates including HIPAA, and a remote workforce are adding more complexity to your mailing operations. “

We were spending eight hours per day between two people manually addressing envelopes. Now the whole process takes less than an hour. Quadient's software not only reduces the associated labor for our mail operations, but it also helps prevent the wrong patient information from being placed in the wrong envelope. As the pages are barcoded to match the address page of each recipient, the system stops if all of the barcodes don't match up or if the pages are not in the right order. This is an important safety element that can prevent the unintended disclosure of patient information to the wrong recipient.

— Paula Dascher, BS RHIA Manager, Clinical Documentation and HIM Technology at Seattle Children's Hospital
