Rights and Responsibilities Under A Distance Learning Telecourse License:

An Annenberg Media Distance Learning Telecourse license provides higher education institutions with the right to use Annenberg Media series in distance/distributed learning courses under the following terms.

- ◆ Use of integrated course components to include video, textbooks, study guides, faculty guides, test-banks, and other components, including course-specific web sites and all related media, including, for example, DVDs, etc., where applicable;
- ◆ Duplication and retention of copies of the course video programs (for replication source formats available by series, please call 1-800-LEARNER) through the license term for use solely by faculty teaching, and students enrolled in, the course;
- ◆ Distribution and delivery of the programs on a non-commercial cable channel, non-commercial public television (PBS) station; closed-circuit or ITFS system;
- ◆ Digitization of course video tapes for retransmission on above channels;
- ◆ Exhibition of programs on playback, projection or other audiovisual display devices for use solely by faculty and students enrolled in the course;
- ◆ Video-streaming of course video programs and/or course video program excerpts for use in online-based/e-learning course offerings provided that use is in conjunction with viewing of video programs/series in their entirety, and that course video programs are not edited, modified or altered in any fashion;
- ◆ Storage of digitized programs on the licensee's digital distribution system in a format that can be video-streamed only. Downloading is strictly prohibited;
- ◆ Provide access to streamed video via password protection to enrolled students and licensee faculty teaching the course;
- ◆ Institutions may direct enrolled students to the Video on Demand (VOD) resources on the Annenberg Media web site at <http://www.learner.org/resources> as a source for viewing the course video programs. Telecourse license and/or student enrollment fees still apply;
- ◆ Institutions are authorized to offer a course in multiple sections during a single academic term.
